Objective of the programme:
Clinical pharmacology services, research and teaching in developing countries have improved over the past 50 years with over 90% of countries having the appropriate policies for regulation and rational use of medicines in place.
Unfortunately, policy implementation remains a challenge, owing to a worsening disease burden and drug situation, versus fewer clinical pharmacologists and other competing priorities for the national budgets. This has led to a preference for training 'a physician clinical pharmacologist' in programmes emphasizing local relevancy and for a shorter time, and the training of other professionals in therapeutics for endemic diseases (task shifting), as the most promising strategies of ensuring rational use of medicines

Topics Covered:

- Clinical pharmacology activities
- Recognition of clinical research
- and local support
- The disease burden
- Economic growth

Outcome of the Programme

The students and faculty gaining the knowledge on Circumstances in the developing countries foster promotion of 'a specialist clinical pharmacologist' and 'task shifting' for some endemic diseases as the most appropriate strategies to meet the current and future challenges to rational use of medicines in these countries. This implies that clinical pharmacology in developing countries is advancing in a different way to that in the developed world and that this does not, in any way, mean poor quality or no progress. Continuing support for these efforts will go a long way in promoting improved health for all.

Outcome of the Programme

The students and faculty gaining the knowledge on medicinal herbs as potential source of therapeutics aids has attained a significant role in health care system all over the world for human beings not only in the diseased condition but also as potential material for maintaining proper health^s. It is clear that the herbal industry can make great strides in the world. With the increased use of herbal products, the future worldwide labeling practice should adequately address quality aspects. Standardization of methods and quality control data on safety and efficacy are required for understanding of the use of herbal drugs. A major factor impeding the development of the medicinal plant based industries in developing countries has been the lack of information on the social and economic benefits that could be derived from the industrial utilization of medicinal plants. Further research is required to exploit the compounds responsible for the observed biological activity
